Town-Hall, Inverness, 27th Nov. 1786.

THE Magistrates and Town Council of this Burgh, having taken under their ferious consideration, the plan formed by a meeting of Gentlemen in Edinburgh, for totally altering the prefent corn laws, and for having all the ports in Scotland regulated as to export and import, by proofs to be taken in Edinburgh, they difaprove of the Plan, and Refolive to oppose it by every constitutional mean in their power, for the following reasons;

I. That the Corn Law, as it presently stands, has been productive of very great advantage to the kingdom at large, and to this town and county in particular, which labouring under the want of sevel, and other natural disadvantages, have no chance for the success of their attempts to establish Mammasatures sinks fisheries, but by corn and meal bring kept at reasonable prices.

Use That, in the opinions of this meeting, the alterations proposed by the Gentlemen met at Edinburgh, would have the effect of greatly advancing the price of Corn and Meal in this town, and in the county of Inverness, which never produces com sufficient for the maintenance of its inhabitants.

III. That the only amendments upon the present Corn Law which this meeting think necessary, are, to have the prices sized by an Inquest, consisting of eight Landed Gentlemen; and that the ports when opened, do remain so be transments.

And they appoint a copy of their Resolutions to be transments.

And they appoint a copy of their Resolutions to be trans-mitted to their Representative in Parliament, and to be in-ferted in the Caledonian Mercury and Edinburgh Evening WILLIAM MACKINTOSH, Provolt.

They were attended by Lady Holdernesse, Lady Harcourt, Lady Elizabeth Waldegrave, Lord Salisbury, his Grace of Queensbery, Lord Amherst, and Lord Aylesbury, who appeared for the first time in public with the infignia of the Order of the Tniffle. The Court being still in mourning, 'tis needless to take any notice of the dreffes.

Wednesday Mr Eden waited on the King, and presented to his Majesty a miniature picture of the King of France, richly set in diamonds. This was a present from his Most Christian Majesty, and given as a mark of his friendship towards his Britan-nic Majesty.

The Commercial Treaty with France, fays a corretpondent, in the of all the cert ponticians, must appear an object of pleasing contemplation to the eye of sober reason, and enlightened observation. National and religious prejudices, from the fatal effu-fion of fo much blood, have received by this public act fo fevere a blow, that their force must in the first instance be greatly weakened, and in a little time their very existence, it may be fairly hoped, will be fully and finally destroyed.

The liberal principles on which every article is founded do equal honour to each of the high contracting parties; the proposed advantages are open, fair, manly, and reciprocal; the erroneous fystem of Customhouse regulations, under which the honest and upright merchant was too often exposed to become the victim of captious enfrarement, and legal chicanery, is corrected or profcribed, and a due discrimination is made between innocent mistakes and fraudulent intentions. In a word, the scatures. of the whole treaty proclaim it the child of the two most enlightened and most respectable powers of

The Commercial Treaty, fays the fame correspondent, now in a train of negotiation with Russia, is faid to breathe the fame spirit of liberality, and to be founded on a fimilar basis of reciprocal benefit. unincumbered with impolitic reftrictions and partial limitations. Of this, indeed, there is little reason to doubt, when it is confidered on what different grounds the negociating parties stand. - Here are no prejudices to be removed; no national antipathies to be combated or overcome-Great Britain, and the empire in queltion, have been long and uniformly connected by the strong ties of reciprocal interest and mutual effeem; and the illustrious Sovereign is too enlightened not to feel the policy, and justly to appreciate the value, of a commercial annection with a nation that annually brings into her country ready money for nearly three-fourths of all the products exported from the Rullian empire. A fuitable return, in favour of the manufactures of Great-Britain, is naturally expected; and it is prefumed there will be no great difficulty in obtaining from an ancient and natural friend a Tariff as favourable at least to the staple commodities, not interfering with those of Russia, as has been established in her favour the appellation of her national enemy.

When to the above are added the treaties with Spain and Portugal, both faid to be in great forwardneis, we may look forward with a pleasing expectation to enjoy the bleffings of peace, and form rea fonable hopes that the proneness and disposition to war will be funk in the more uleful and political ap-

by a power that for ages has been diffinguished by plication of all ranks to the promoting of arts and commerce, and preferving the peace and harmony

MEETING OF WEST INDM MERCHANTS. Wednesday, at noon, a most respectable meeting of West India merchants and phinters was held at the Marine Society's Office in Lishopsgate street (which plan had been adopted with the intention of preventing the intrusion of improper persons), for the purpose of taking into consideration the present fituation of the British Wed India fugar and rum colonies; as the produce of their diffilleries may be affected by the present treaty with France, and the increased supposed consumption of brandy, by the duties being lowered from os. 6d. to 7s. per gallon-One leading idea prevailed among all the santement prefent, which was, that the confumption of rum will necessarily be affected by the encouragement thus given to the importation of French fpirits, unless a proportionate lowering of the duties on the the manufacture and produce of the British West India colonies, take place. This was resolved on nem. con. After which there was ageneral conversation as to the step necessary to be pursued at this juncture.

A Committee was accordingly appointed to wait on, represent, and hold conferences with Mr Pitt, in order to lay the premises before hin. All the gentlemen connected with the West India islands in parliament are appointed on this Committee, who are to be fuperintendants for the general good of the whole body of merchants and planters in the West-

India islands, or any way connected therevith.

The meeting fat till about three o'clock, and then adjourned.

Tuefday Mr Bowes was brougt down to the Cou of King's Bench about one evident. He present a spectacle at once affecting and admonitory. He was bent almost double; his head was wound up in bandages, in confequence of the wounds he had received, and he was brought in between two persons, feemingly in great pain - Being allowed a feat, the assidavit of Lady Strathmore was read to him, on which Mr Law faid, that this part of the buliness must be postponed, as Mr Bowes's affidavir must be attached to it, and they must reply by ashdavit. The articles of the peace were then read, and upon these the Court faid that they should think it their duty to require heavy fureties for the future behaviour of Mr Bowes. On the subject of the attachment for contempt,

Mr Chambre, as Counfel for Mr Bowes, argued that the attachment had been iffued on premiles not well founded, for the writ of Habeas had rever been ferved on Mr B. He had left Streatham Castle with Lady S. at eight o'clock on the day when the assidavit stated the service to be made-That as foon as he heard that the writ was iffined. it was his purpose to comply with it-and he was coming to town when he was overtaken by his purfuers, and treated fo inhumanly as his affidavit fet forth. That after this he was prevented from come-ing by the overflowing of the Dee. For these rea-sons he contended that the attachment should be discharged.

The Court faid that they could not receive the report of the denial of the service. The affidavit was compleat, and they must in this stage consider it as conclusive evidence. It would be in Mr B.'s power to thew that it was erroneous - in the mean was their duty to punish the comempt which he had shewn, and they must commit him to the prison of the King's Rench.

MI Chambre prayed the Court, that on account of his ill state of health, he might be committed to the care of a Tipstaff. This the Court over-ruled, as the prison of the King's Bench would afford every accommodation to Mr B. He was accordingly committed till the next term.

Extract of a letter from London, Dec. 1. " By letters from France, we are affured, that a treaty of alliance is concluded between the Houses of Brandenburgh and Austria. It is also faid, that a treaty of a fimilar nature is in agitation between France and England, by way of counterbalance to that between the Emperor and William II.; but this last wants confirmation. HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

Lord Advocate against Mr Stein.
Yesterday morning, the Court proceeded in the trial of Mr James Stein, an eminent distiller at Kilbagie, who flood indicted at the instance of his Majellyle Advocate, for the crime of bribing, or attempring to bribe Mr John Bonnar, Solicitor of Excife, by thrusting into his pocket, on the 2d of September 1785, a paper parcel, containing soot. Sterling in bank-notes, with the following words wrote on the infide of the cover, This to be repeated once a-year.

After the Jury were chosen, which consisted partly of country gentlemen, and partly of citizens of Edinburgh, the proof on the part of the Crown commenced. The first witness adduced by the Lord Advocate was Mr John Bounar Solicitor of Excife, who, in the course of a very long examination, gave a most accurate, distinct, and candid account of the facts which gave rife to the prefent profecution. From his evidence it appeared, that Mr Stein had invited himself to breakfast with the witness, on the morning of the 2d of September That there was no other person present but the witnels and the pannel: That the conversation, during the time of breakfast, turned chiefly upon the Eng-lish Distillery, the Highland Distillery, and the ex-pectants which the Board of Excise had thought necessary about that time to place in greater numbers than formerly upon the large Distilleries, on account of frauds which had been discovered committed a. gainst the revenue in some of these distilleries : That after breakfast had been removed, and the pannel about to take his leave, having his hat in his hand, he advanced towards the witness, who was then standing in the stoor of his own room, and, after faying something about a pair of gloves, thrust into the right fide coat-pocket of the witness a parcel, at the same time putting his hand on the witness's right shoulder, with an intention, as he supposed, of preventing him from examining the parcel, or knowing what it contained : That immediately after this, the pannel ran out of the room, or at least left it so pre-cipitately, that the witness had no opportunity of entering into any explanation on the subject; but that he called after him, " Mr Sein, if you have "done what I suspect, you will hear of it," or words to that purpose: That the witness then opened the parcel, and found an inclosure of money to the extent above mentioned, together with writing on the cover already noticed: That the witness was very much affected at this transaction, and determined to take the advice of fome friend how to behave in the bufiness : That he according ly, the fame forenoon, laid the whole matter be Mr Balmain, one of the Commissioners of Excise when it was refolved between them, that the packet should be put under another cover, scaled with both their feals, and authenticated by their subscriptions, till an opportunity should occur of consulting a full Board upon the subject: That this measure was adopted, and the witness wrote a letter to the pannel, expressive of the sense he entertained of the indigni ty which had been offered to him in leaving such a parcel, and of prefuming to think him capable of receiving it : That, to this letter, he had received as answer from the pannel, in which he declared his forrow that the witness should entertain an idea of his meaning to affront, or call in question the ho-nour or fidelity of the witness, by begging the ac-ceptance of the packet he had left with him; for that no man could have a higher opinion of him than he had; but that he thought himself bound is gratitude to make fome recompence for the loss the witness had fustained by the pannel's carrying a cause in the Court of Exchequer, which he confidered is much against the interest of the Solicitor's offices That this letter, however, did not fatisfy the wit-ness; for, a similar attempt having been made by the pannel, in the year 1782, recently after the cause lluded to, concerning the hydrometer proof, was determined in the court of Exchequer, and when the witness was only first Clerk in the office where he is now principal, he owned it hurt his feelings for much to have a fecond attempt made upon him by a larger fam, that he could not think of following the fame plan of conduct which he had done upon the first attempt: That, upon that occasion, the pannel had also invited himself to breakfall with him, when he took an opportunity of thrufting into his breaft, which happened to be open at the time, a parcel containing 150 l. with a note, intimating, that it was to be repeated twice a-year: That the pannel, at this time, likewife, left the room in fo abrupt a manner, as rendered it impossible for the witness to ask the meaning of fuch conduct; but that he took the first opportunity in his power of returning the money, by inclosing it in a letter to the pannel, wherein he stated his resolution never to receive, in any shape, a present from any Distiller whatever, and begging that the pannel, in future, would not propose any such thing to him: That it was the remembrance of this transaction, which induced the witness to call out to the pannel, in the words before recited; and it was likewife the inefficacy of the advice he had formerly given to the pannel, that impelled him not to follow the fame line of conduct upon this, as he had observed on the former occasion. Mr Bonnar, on being interrogated by the Dean of Faculty, on the part of the pannel, depofed, that Mr Stein had not, of the conversations above mentioned, ever solicited for, or hinted, in the most distant manner, that the witness should do him any favour: That the pannel was a most extensive distiller, perhaps one of the greatest in Scotland: That he paid very large sums to government annually: That he believed him a fair and honest dealer: That his distillery was not one of those in which frauds had been discovered, and which was the occasion of the Board of Excise placing additional expectants upon them: And, that he never knew of any profecution intended against the pannel, for alledged frauds against the Revenue. The Dean of Faculty then asked Mr Bonnar, whether he had not, in the course of getting the new difillery law paffed, given his affiftance to the Scots distillers, and particularly to the pannel? Mr Bonnar acknowledged that he had taken some concern in that business: That he had attended feveral meetings of the Scots Members of Parliament at London, on the Subject, where the pannel and other Scots distillers were also present : And that he returned from London in the fame post-chaife with the pannel. The Dean of Faculty afterwards produced two letters from the witness to the pannel, which he inlifted were conceived in the warmest terms of Fiendship; and thefe, together with the fad of their both coming down in a post-chaise from London, took off any idea the Jury might encertain of the witness and pannel being upon bad terms, from the circumstance of the fatter having thrust into the former's breaft the 150 l. mentioned above. Thefe letters, on the contrary, Mr Erskine observed, shewed the great trouble the witness had been at, in serving the pannel, as well as the Scotch Distillers in general, which might be the principal inducement that led him, both on his own account and theirs, to renew the offer of a present which the witness formerly had rejected.

Mr Balmain, Commissioner of Excise, was the pext witness called. His evidence went to substantiate that of Mr Bonnar, and to prove the identity of the packet which had been sealed by him and that gentleman, and which was produced in Court.

The other evidences called for the Crown were brought forward in order to prove the letter above referred to, and the note upon the cover of the par-cel being the hand-writing of the pamel. Though the witnesses could not fwear positively to this fact, yet the Dean of Faculty was inclined to admit it, as he did not imagine that circumstance could materially affect the fate of his client either in one way

The Dean of Faculty then called three Avitneffes, viz. Sir James Hunter Blair, Bart, Mr Erskine of Mar, and Mr James Craig, baker in Edinburgh, to prove the character of the pannel. All of these Gentlemen concurred in giving the most ample testimony as to the honesty, honour, and upright dealing of the pannel, in the very extensive and numerous transactions which had passed between him and

The proof being concluded on both fides, the Lord dayscate addressed the Jury on the part of the Crown. His Lordship observed, that the Court having found the libel relevant, at common law, to infer the crime of bribery, it now became their pro-nince to find whether the fact, as charged in the indictment, was proved or not; and whether the panel made the attempt of bribing the Solioitor of Excise, with the intention of seducing that officer from his duty? The attempt, he faid, had been fully proved; and there could be little donor of the intention, when the relative fituation of the parties were attended to. The one, as had been proved, was a very extensive Distiller; the other an other of Excise, who had, in a great measure, the sole direction and controll of every action carried on against defrauders of the Revenue, either before the inferior Courts or the Court of Exchequer. It was therefore in his power to stop prosecutions, or to quash them, whenever he thought proper; and, if he had not had the virtue to relift the enormous bribe which had been attempted to be forced upon him, it would have been impossible for Mr Bonnar, as well observed by himself, in the course of his eridence, ever to have done his duty with fidelity ar any after period, wherever the pannel, or any of his connections, had the finallest concern.

The Hon, Henry Er/kine, Dean of Faculty, then addressed the Jury on the part of the pannel, and combated, with much ingenuity and strength of rea-foning, every topic advanced by the Lord Advo-cate. But it is impossible for us to enter minutely into the various arguments of these learned gentle The Dean observed, that he did not think the Lord Advocate ought to have founded any thing apon the interlocutor of the Court, finding the relevancy. He held it as a clear principle, that the Jury were judges of the land as well as of the fact. The Court, no doubt, had found the libel relevant But if the Jury thought, as he did, that this was an erroneous judgment, they were not bound to pay a fly regard to it. With respect to the relative fituation of the parties, he was ready to meet the Lord Advocate upon that ground, and was willing that the fare of his client should be decided upon that alone. What was the fituation of the pannel? He was an eminent distiller. He was a gentleman of the most irreproachable character. He had been so chafte in his dealings, that not even a fuspicion had been entertained of his acting unfairly by Govern-ment. He had never asked a favour; nor had he made any Hipulation, when this alledged bribe was attempted, that he was to receive any. On the contrary, he thought himfelf bound, in gratitude, to make Mr Bonnar a present for the very handsome manner in which he had conducted the fivdrometer cause, as well as for the later instance of his services performed to the pangel, and the whole diffillers in Scotland. — The Lord Advocate had faid a great deal about the largeness of the sum.— He acknowledged it was a large one. But the Jury were not to imagine that the whole of it came out of the pocket of his client. It was a common cause of the whole Distillers of Scotland, and they did not think Mr Bonnar overpaid, confidering the great fervices he had performed. The Dean then took a review of Mr Bonnar's situation as Solicitor of Excite, and denied that it was in his power either to flop or quash profecutions; confequently, that he could grant no favour, were he fo inclined, to his client, or to any other Diftiller. It was very true, he had the commencing and even conducting of profecutions. But he was amenable to others for his faithful difcharge of that duty. In the first place, he was liable to be called to account by the Commissioners of Excise. He was also accountable to the Crown Lawyers. And, should both these negled their duty, which it was not to be supperfed they would, he had still another check upon him. In was the feizure maker or informer, who, as they had a pecuniary interest in the condemnation, would infilt upon its being carried into effect. Mr Erikine illustrated this by a very curious case which happened towards the conclusion of last war. Government had occasion for a great quantity of spirits to send to our troops in America. French brandy, therefore, to the amount of 36,000 l. Sterling, was commissioned and brought over to Dover; but, as it was for the fervice of government, it was thought unnecessary to use the necessary precautions to prevent its being seized. A poor officer of the Excise, however, better acquainted with his duty than those who acled in a higher fphere, made a feizure of the whole cargo. Remonstrances were made. Threatnings were eve used against the poor officer. But he continued inflexible, and insisted upon a trial. The consequence was, that though the Attorney-General, and the other crown lawyers appeared a gainst the seizure-maker, he obtained a verdict in his favour, and thereby pocketed about 16,000 f. at the expence of being deprived of an office which brought him 35l. a-year. Mr Erskine was extremely happy in a great number of his allusions. in which we are unable to follow him. He concluded with hoping, that the jury would either and the pannel more guilty; or, that the money was given without any intention to feduce Mr. Bonnar from his duty.

The Lord Justice Clerk afterwards delivered a charge to the Jury of confiderable length, and they were appointed to return their verdict this day, at the rifing of the Court of Session, which they accordingly did in the following words: -" They all in one voice Find the delivery of sool.

if find the intention of feducing and corrupting the " faid John Bonar proven," Mr Stein was therefore affoilzied fintliciter, and

Sterling to Mr John Bonnar proven; but do not

Mr Stein was therefore affoilzied fimpliciter, and dismiffed from the bar.

In the night betwixt Saturday and Sunday last, a hoffer's fhop in the New Yown was broke into, and upwards of three pounds in cash, and a quantity of flockings carried off. It is supposed that several men have been concerned in this robbery, as the locks and bolts of the door, which are very ftrong, were prized out of their fackers.

On Thursday night, a gentleman coming to Kil-lyth in a one horse chaise, was attacked by two sel-lows, who robbed him of what money he had. They were taken next morning, and carried to Stir-

Some nights ago, a villain took the opportunity of entering a shop in the Saltmarket, Glasgow, while the mistrefs, a widow woman, who fells bread, was in an adjoining apartment. The first thing ou which he tried his manual dexterity was upon a par-cel of loaves that lay on a shelf, which he very affectionately enfolded in his arms, and was returning to the door, when observing a pound of candles hanging on a nail, and being unwilling to leave beafford him the ineftinable article as that which could afford him the ineftinable bleffing of light to ear his ill gotten booty, he immediately reached up his hand and took them down, but in fo doing, fome of the loaves fell to the floor, the noise of which alarming the mistress, she instantly came our of the back a partment to learn the cause, when on seeing the villain, the purfued and got hold of him, but his ac-complices coming to his affiltance, he got off with the lofs of the candles only, they having fallen in the freet during the flruggle.

And, on Saturday night, feveral attempts were made to carry away tills from different shops in the Trongate, by a blackguard banditti, which traversed from shop to shop; one of which was detected when making his escape with a till.

Same night, a fervant girl had her poeket cut away from her fide, in the Saltmarket, which contained half a crown. A young rafeal was taken im-mediately after the commission of the deed; and, when interrogated, confessed that he dropped it in the street, but it is imagined he had conveyed it to his companions,

The taut from the Chair.

Thereafter the Meeting baving confidered the proposed alterations by the gentlemen heritors, and others, met at Edinbargh, on the 10th of August last, with regard to the Corn Laws, are unanimously of opinion, That it would be highly idexpedient for the county to invest any Mid-Lothian jury with the power of opening or shurting all the ports in Scotland, for the following reasons:

1. That the heritors and other inhabitants of Mid-Lothian, living at a considerable distance, are so unconnected with this part of the united kingdom, that they must frequently be unacquainted with the real quantity or price of victual in the northern countless:

11. That this rounty, is frequently liable to distresses, arising the county of the county, is frequently liable to distresses, arising the country of the co victual in the northern countless.

II. That this county, is frequently liable to diffresses arising from fools, mildews, stoods, and hate barvess, whereby they offen have a very indifferent crop, when the contrary is the safe in the suffering countries of Scotland.

III. That as in this county there seldom grows corn sufficient for the malbetnance of its inhabitants, and which will make any more by the cost.

more and more be the case, when due encouragement is given to the Fisheries on its extensive sea-coasts and islands, and its rifing manufactures, it must frequently happen, that the price of grain will be high when the time is me igrate in the county of Mid-Lothian.

W. That at the legislature had already checked the oranged price of the staple contributing of this country, by the induspence given to Ireland, it cannot; without bringing unifest ruin on the Highlands of Sectland, make such alterestion in the present Coin Laws, as may have a tendency to wise the reject of coin Laws, as may have a tendency to tion in the prefent Corn Laws, as may have a tendency to raife the price of grain.

V. At the fame time the Meeting are of opinion, That it would be highly expedient to have the mode of affectaining the prices of grain in every county regulated, and any abuse to which the prefent law is highle corrected; and that it would have a very good effect, that the price of grain about the strength of the price of grain about the proof sught offy to be taken twice in the year, viz. in October and April, and that the ports should continue opened of strength of the months thereafter.

VI. The Meeting are surther of opinion, That it would prove of great national benefit, that an uniformity of weights and measures was established throughout this kingdom:

The Meeting having also considered the outlines of a plant laid before them, for uniting the King's and Manischall's Universities of Aberdeen, they all in one voice, excepting four of their number, Magistrates in the town of Invernets, disapprove thereof.

four of their number, Magnitudes in the town of inverners, dispopose thereof.

1.700, Because, by the proposed union; there will be a total stop put to emulation betwist the two Universities, which they apprehend to be the best sput for promoting every establishment.

246; Because it would be of very dangerous consequence, was the Legislature to make any such effectial alteration in the donations made to these Universities, or their franchise, as might prove a total check to sich endowments in suture.

346, That as population is upon the increase in this part of the united kingdom, it would be imposite to clog the avenues to emultion, by making any alteration in these Colleges, which have flourished for so many years, when the several branches of learning were less an object of pursuit than in the prefert age.

nues to erudition, by making any alteration in these Coileges, which have sourished for so many years, when the several branches of learning were less an object of pursuit than in the present age.

410, The Meeting particularly disapprove of having classes in the same University at above a mile's distance from each other, as proposed by the said plan; because it frequently happens that young men, either from extraordinary expacities, or limited fortunes, may find it expedient, during the same selfison, to attend these separate classes; and the Meeting are rather inclined to think, that if one College was deemed sufficient for the town of Aberdeen, that it would be more for the national good hat the same should be fixed at Old Aberdeen, as possessing better air and better buildings than those of the Marischal College, and being at a greater distance from such amusements as frequently are apt to divert young men from a due attention to study. And, Lasses, This Meeting humbly apprehend, that in place of charging the salaries of the present Prosessor, and in the parameter to be the principal object of the foresaid plan, that if it is thought expedient to annihilate one of them, that it would be also proper to dispose of the buildings of the other, and employ the price thereof; and if there remain any surplus after highowing proper salaries on the Prosessor of the remaining College, then employ the same in establishing an Academy in some tentrical royal burgh in the Highlands, which would prove of very great national importance.

The Meeting having afterwards confidered the new Rogue Money Bill, are of opinion, that the same is unnecessary, and is calculated to in rease the criminal business of the Sne-riff Court, and thereby diminish that of the Circuits. They apprehend it would be an improper alteration in the judicial law of Scotland; and therefore recommend to their representative in Baliament to oppose the same, when it shall be gain be brought before Parliament.

Thereaster the Meeting recommended to their rep

And, laftly, The Meeting appoint these Minutes to be published in all the Edinburgh newspapers.

been in general die for many years, and is in the highest repute as a substitute, where tea and foreign coffee do not agree, to be an admirable remedy for althmas, coughs of long standing, consumptions, low spirits, and nervous complaints;

whether they arise from a delicacy in the habit, irregular living or advanced years. It is perfectly site and salubrious, very agreeable to the taste, and much more nutrimental than
